OREM — Construction on Eighth North between State Street and Provo Canyon Road (U.S. 189) will be a familiar site for the next 18 months or so as road crews widen the road and construct a traffic interchange at the Eighth North/Provo Canyon intersection.

The first phase of the project, started last month, includes widening of Eighth North from State Street to Sixth East. The road will be widened from two to four lanes, including a median turning lane, curb, gutter and sidewalks.

Total cost of the project will be about $6.2 million. The federal government will fund about 87 percent of the project, with the state picking up the remainder.

According to UDOT officials, the first phase will be finished in June. A contract for widening the rest of Eighth North to Provo Canyon Road will be let sometime this fall, with work completed next year.

Also, as part of the first phase, a clover-like interchange will be constructed at the mouth of Provo Canyon Road. The intersection will be free-flowing and will consist of two elevated bridges over the Provo River where Eighth North meets Provo Canyon Road. One structure will handle traffic to and from Provo Canyon off and onto Eighth North. The second will be for traffic turning off of Eighth North and heading south on Provo Canyon Road.

The structures will include retaining walls and require about 4,000 yards of concrete, according to Les Larsen, structure superintendent for Lays Rock Co., which is doing much of the work.

Cuts in terrain along the east side of Provo Canyon Road are being made in preparation for improving and widening the road to include a median passing lane from the mouth of the canyon to the Murdock Diversion Dam. Larsen said some cuts through the canyon above the road are also being made to avert possible mudslides.
